Check if Schedule O contains a response or note to any line in this Part III

1 Briefly describe the organization's mission

Founded in 1974, MDRC is a nonprofit, nonpartisan social policy and education research organization that is driven by its mission MDRC is dedicated to learning what works to improve the well-being of low-income people Through our research and the active communication of our findings, we seek to enhance the effectiveness of social policies and programs that affect the poor With a diverse staff of more than 350, MDRC carries out its mission by mounting large-scale evaluations of government and community programs targeted to low-income people, developing and field-testing promising new approaches, providing technical assistance, and working to ensure that our evidence informs the design and implementation of policies and programs We helped pioneer the use of random assignment - the same highly reliable methodology used to test new medicines - in social policy research Working in partnership with others, MDRC is building an important body of evidence about what works - and doesn't wor

4 Describe the organization's program service accomplishments for each of its three largest program services, as measured by expenses Section 501(c)(3) and 501(c)(4) organizations are required to report the amount of grants and allocations to others, the total expenses, and revenue, if any, for each program service reported

4a (Code) (Expenses $ 22,184,955 including grants of $ 502,000) (Revenue $ 1,111,289) Family Well-Being and Children's Development Children who grow up in poverty face much greater risks of academic failure, poor health, and emotional distress and, as adults, are more likely to be unemployed and poor MDRC's studies on children and families are providing a new generation of reliable evidence for policymakers about strategies that benefit the social, emotional, and cognitive development of low-income children - some by improving the life prospects of parents and others by working directly with children Our two-generation approaches hold the most promise, as developmental theory predicts that improving outcomes for both parents and children together has more powerful effects than focusing on either generation alone For more than two decades, MDRC has been a leader in an expanding field of research that examines how children are affected by welfare reform and other social policies that are primarily designed to affect the employment and income status of their parents MDRC is studying several initiatives that seek to benefit children by building healthier family relationships For instance, MDRC is the lead evaluator of the federal government's $1.5 billion investment in home visiting programs, which provide preventive services to families with young children to prevent child maltreatment, improve maternal and child health outcomes, and increase school readiness Our child care and early education studies aim to deepen policymakers' understanding of the effects of early care environments, including Head Start We have been a leader in developing and testing programs that bolster the emotional and behavioral development of preschoolers, and are running two demonstration projects in New York City, Making Pre-K Count and High 5s, that seeks to improve the math skills of preschool children and kindergartners Finally, MDRC is the lead in the Behavioral Interventions to Advance Self-Sufficiency (BIAS) project, an unprecedented opportunity to apply and test insights about the science of decision-making in the context social assistance programs and populations supported by the Administration for Children and Families (ACF) in the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Selected highlights in 2014: Managed the Making Pre-K Count demonstration in New York City, a test of an innovative math-focused intervention for preschools serving low-income children, which has influenced preschool programming of the de Blasio administration Launched High-5s, kindergarten math clubs that will build on the preschool intervention Released final implementation and impact results from the Head Start CARES Project, which examined the effects and implementation of three evidence-based strategies to improve the social and emotional development of children in more than 100 Head Start centers across the country All three had positive impacts on teacher practice and on children's social-emotional outcomes during the preschool year Released the final report from the Supporting Health Marriage Demonstration, which tested relationship and marriage skills programs for low-income married couples Continue to oversee the national evaluation of home visiting programs for the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Published the first annual report from the Mother and Infant Home Visiting-Strong Start Evaluation Continued to field tests for the Behavioral Interventions to Advance Self-Sufficiency (BIAS) Project, the first major opportunity to apply a behavioral research lens to programs that serve poor families in the United States - programs like cash assistance, child care, child support, and child welfare Published "Seeking Answers to Big Questions MDRC's Portfolio in Early Childhood Education" Was awarded a federal five-year contract to MDRC to evaluate Responsible Fatherhood programs in the Building Bridges and Bonds (B3) study

4b (Code) (Expenses $ 12,251,933 including grants of $ 270,000) (Revenue $ 283,190) Low-Wage Workers and Communities Long regarded as the premier investigator of policies to improve the lives of families on welfare, MDRC is bringing its program development skills and reputation for methodological rigor to the challenge of learning how best to improve the economic health of low-income workers and communities In a focused portfolio of projects, we are investigating strategies to "make work pay" - providing financial supports that build a safety net around work while continuing to encourage employment - and initiatives to help low-income people find more stable jobs, advance in the labor market, and achieve long-term self-sufficiency Our studies are among the largest and most rigorous evaluations of such interventions in the country The concentration of poverty - and an associated lack of access to good jobs, affordable housing, quality goods and services, and economic and political resources - presents special challenges for improving the prospects of residents of low-income neighborhoods MDRC has evaluated a number of "place-based" projects that addressed urban poverty and joblessness Most notable of these was our Jobs-Plus initiative, one of the most ambitious employment programs ever attempted inside some of the nation's poorest inner-city housing projects Based on the positive findings from Jobs-Plus, we are replicating the program in two cities in a Social Innovation Fund initiative with the Mayor's Fund to Advance New York City and the NYC Center for Economic Opportunity Selected highlights from 2014: Released interim results on Family Rewards 2.0, the revised conditional cash transfer program that we originally tested in New York City Conducted a national webinar on implementing Jobs-Plus, an employment program in public housing that MDRC helped develop and evaluated that is being replicated by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development Conducting an evaluation of the federal Family Self-Sufficiency Program with at least 2,500 housing voucher holders from 18 housing authorities across the country Through the Center for Economic Opportunity's Social Innovation Fund Initiative, testing five innovative programs first piloted in New York City in communities around the country Released interim findings from SaveUSA, a program to encourage low- and moderate-income tax-filers to save, which were featured in a national webinar sponsored by the Center for American Progress For the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, conducting a rent reform demonstration for Housing Choice Voucher Programs Released a policy brief and an infographic on Paycheck Plus, a demonstration of an enhanced Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC) for single adults without dependent children in New York City Gordon Berlin was featured at an American Enterprise Institute forum on the EITC Released the final results from MDRC's evaluation of Chicago's New Communities Program, a $10-year, $50-million initiative Published a research review about building evidence on financial inclusion interventions Launched the Subprime Lending Data Exploration project to gain a deeper understanding of the people who use alternative credit instruments, such as payday loans

4c (Code) (Expenses $ 15,683,373 including grants of $ 216,879) (Revenue $ 454,526) Health and Barriers to Employment MDRC was originally established to study programs for the "hard-to-employ," Americans who face serious obstacles to finding and keeping steady work Our very first project, the National Supported Work Demonstration, tested the impact of paid work experience for long-term welfare recipients, ex-offenders, high school dropouts, and substance abusers, and it is still regarded as one of the most comprehensive sources of evidence on employment programs targeted to these groups Today we are testing tailored interventions for specific hard-to-employ groups - people with work-limiting disabilities, those with physical, mental health, or substance abuse problems, long-term welfare recipients, and reentering prisoners MDRC has built a portfolio of projects testing innovative strategies to enhance health care services and health outcomes for low-income people, with a particular focus on services for individuals with health- and disability-related barriers to employment At the same time, we are testing programs for ex-prisoners and low-income people who are dependent on federal disability assistance In addition, MDRC has a growing portfolio of projects focused on disconnected youth, which includes the Youth Transition Demonstration and evaluations of YouthBuild, the National Guard Youth Challenge program, and Youth Villages The findings of our new studies as they emerge will expand the body of knowledge about how to address particular barriers to employment - and how to implement effective programs in the different public assistance, enforcement, and service delivery systems that interact with the hard-to-employ population Selected highlights from 2014: Implemented the nation's first Social Impact Bond, an innovative way to fund promising new programs at no cost to taxpayers, with the City of New York, Goldman Sachs, and Bloomberg Philanthropies MDRC implemented a cognitive behavioral therapy program for 16- to 18-year-olds detained at New York City's Rikers Island with the goal of reducing the high recidivism rate for this population by focusing on personal responsibility education, training, and counseling Released a report on lessons learned from the initiative's first 18 months For the Edna McConnell Clark Foundation's Social Innovation Fund Initiative, replicating promising programs for disconnected youth in communities around the country Published final documents from the TANF/SSI Disability Transition Project, which sought to better understand the relationship between the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families and Supplemental Security Income systems as it relates to welfare applicants and recipients with potential disabilities and to work closely with participating TANF agencies to develop and implement strong pilot tests targeted to that population Continued running two major federal projects testing enhanced models of transitional jobs programs for hard-to-employ populations, including former prisoners and noncustodial fathers Released the first report from our national evaluation of the YouthBuild programs Published a popular research review on promising models for helping high school dropouts earn their GED or other high school equivalency and move on to postsecondary education - which was also a focus of a Capitol Hill forum hosted by the American Youth Policy Forum Released an influential research review on what rigorous research says about education, employment and training, and second-chance programs that have positive effects for young men of color Dan Bloom, director of the policy area, testified before the House Ways and Means Subcommittee on Human Resources on what research says about the effectiveness of subsidized employment programs The first major publication from our behavioral science project with the federal Administration for Children and Families was released on a successful intervention to help incarcerated parents apply for child support Part III, Program (d) - Other Programmatic Activities Young Adults and Postsecondary Education According to the U.S. Census Bureau, individuals who have a bachelor's degree will earn about $2.1 million over their lifetimes - about one-third more than those who start but do not complete college and nearly twice as much as those who only have a high school diploma Additionally, college graduates are more likely to be employed high school dropouts are five times as likely to be unemployed today as workers with degrees Although the U.S. Department of Labor forecasts that 70 percent of all new jobs will require a postsecondary credential, 60 million adults currently lack one Access to higher education has been greatly expanded since the mid-1960s Unfortunately, rates of persistence and credential completion in remain distressingly low, particularly at community colleges - where only one third of all students who enter with the intention of earning a degree or certificate actually meet this goal within six years The reasons behind this problem are myriad some have to do with the students themselves (for instance, a lack of adequate preparation in the K-12 system and the challenge of balancing work, family, and school responsibilities) and others are the result of institutional or policy constraints (for instance, insufficient advising and financial aid, uncertainty over how to teach basic skills to adults, and constraints in course offerings and inflexible scheduling) Policymakers and the philanthropic sector have focused new efforts on increasing student persistence and achievement in postsecondary education For example, the Obama Administration has set a goal for the nation of once again having the highest proportion of college graduates in the world by 2020, and Lumina Foundation for Education is seeking to increase the proportion of Americans with "high-quality" degrees and credentials to 60 percent by the year 2025 Since the launch of its Opening Doors Demonstration in the early 2000s, MDRC has been at the forefront of developing and evaluating strategies to help students succeed, particularly students at community colleges and nonselective four-year institutions Selected highlights from 2014: Published findings from MDRC's study of CUNY's innovative and comprehensive Accelerated Study in Associate Programs (ASAP), showing large effects on two-year graduation rates among developmental students, which received prominent coverage in The Atlantic and the New York Times Launched a replication of the ASAP program at three community colleges in Ohio Both the study and the replication were the subject of a Capitol Hill forum Published a how-to guide about how to develop and implement a performance-based scholarship program Released final results from our multiyear evaluation of the prominent Achieving the Dream initiative with community colleges around the nation - As part of the Center for the Analysis of Postsecondary Readiness, launched a rigorous evaluation of the New Mathways Program, developed by the Dana Center at the University of Texas-Austin Continued our study of the Gates Foundation's signature Completion by Design Initiative Managed our demonstration of a new financial aid reform, Aid Like A Paycheck, which pays Pell grants incrementally Awarded a grant by the federal government to evaluate the City University of New York's CUNY Start, an innovative pre-matriculation program for students with significant remedial (or developmental) needs K-12 Education For nearly 20 years, MDRC has been learning what works best to raise the academic achievement of young people who are at risk of failing At a time of growing national and state interest in improving low-performing schools and better preparing students for college and work, our evaluations of comprehensive high school reform models have established MDRC as a respected voice in education research and policy and as a leader in designing rigorous education evaluations At the elementary school level, we are studying a cluster of programs designed to raise literacy and math skills in elementary and middle schools and to improve teaching and learning by investing in the skills of teachers Secondary School Reform High school dropout rates remain stubbornly high, especially for African-American and Hispanic students And too many students who do graduate aren't ready for college and work We have examined three prominent comprehensive high school reform interventions that have had some measure of success in improving students' outcomes First Things First, Talent Development, and Career Academies Our Career Academies study marked the first time that a random assignment design had been used to evaluate an ongoing high school reform initiative The results of this study -impressive earnings effects continuing eight years after graduation - provided important lessons for the improvement and expansion of the 2,500 Career Academies
